FOREIGN NEWS.

ENGLAND

THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION

LONDON, June 23.—It is officially announced that on June 16th Granville, foreign secretary of state, addressed a note to Waddington, French minister, the substance of which was as follows: England undertakes to withdraw her troops from Egypt at the beginning of 1888 in case the powers consider such withdrawal possible without endangering public order. The allied authority in Egypt after 1885 will have a consultative voice in regard to the budget and have the right to veto any increase of expenses on the part of the government. It shall continue to exercise the right of financial inspection after the evacuation of the country by the English in order to insure the regular collection of revenue. England also undertakes during her occupation to propound a scheme to the porte and the powers for the neutralization of Egypt like Belgium and for neutralizing the Suez canal. In reply Waddington gave assurance of the satisfaction with which France welcomes the points suggested by Granville. France, he said, accepts Granville's proposal and testifies to England's moderation and friendly spirit, which it believes will strengthen the bond that unites the two countries.

MARK LANE REVIEW

LONDON, June [illegible].—The Mark Lane Express in its weekly review of the British grain trade says: Broadly speaking the weather favored the strongest and most forward wheats and prejudiced other growing crops. It is impossible as yet to estimate the results of the wheat harvest. Present indications tend in the direction of making the best better and the indifferent worse. Business in foreign wheats has lapsed into a state coma. In cargoes off coast little is doing. There were eight arrivals and three sales. Seven cargoes remained, among which was one of California wheat. About forty cargoes are due the present week. Quotations for cargoes forward are nominal and there is no inquiry. Sales of English wheat during the week were 17,[illegible] quarters at 37s against [illegible] quarters at 4[illegible]s 6d for the corresponding week last year.

SARGENT'S BANQUET

LONDON, June 23.—[Special.]—Among the guests at the banquet Wednesday in honor of Sargent will be Minister Lowell, ex-Senator Ferry, Justin McCarthy M P, Bruce Joy, Bronson Howard, ex-Mayor Hall, ex-Minister Noyes, Consul General Merritt, District Attorney Tenney and G B Bigelow.

SMALLPOX EPIDEMIC

LONDON, June 23.—[Special.]—The small pox epidemic continues to spread throughout the metropolitan districts. Already about 1200 cases being reported. Deaths are at the rate of seventy five per week.

DISCONTENTED

LONDON, June 23.—Intense discontent prevails among the group of independent liberals in regard to Gladstone's statement concerning Egypt affairs.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN MARKET

LIVERPOOL, June 23.—The weather in England is warmer. Wheat is dull and easier. Corn is dull and easier at 5s 6½d.

TO LAY THE NEW CABLE

LONDON, June 23.—The steamship Faraday sailed to-day, to lay the eastern shore end of the first Bennett-Mackay cable.

FRANCE

ASIATIC CHOLERA AT TOULON

PARIS, June 23.—Twenty deaths from cholera occurred at Toulon yesterday. It is feared there will be a panic.

The reports of cholera at Toulon are officially confirmed. Troops and dock laborers are chiefly attacked. It is pronounced Asiatic cholera. Quarantine has been established everywhere. The news caused a sensation in Paris.

The ministry of commerce has issued notice that the cholera at Toulon is sporadic and not Asiatic, that it is due to local infection and therefore confined to the place of its origin. Eight thousand persons left Toulon yesterday. A camp has been formed for the occupation of the navy crews and the pupils of the public schools have been dismissed. At Marseilles there is a cholera scare. Orders have been issued to bury immediately corpses of cholera victims in deep trenches which will be covered with chloride of lime. No bodies will be allowed to be taken to churches.

There were five deaths from cholera at Toulon to-day.

GERMANY

BISMARCK ATTENDS A COMMITTEE MEETING

BERLIN, June 23.—The budget committee to-day continued discussion of state subvention for direct mail service between Germany, Australia and eastern Asia. Bismarck, who has not attended the committee meetings for twelve years past, was present. He declared the government have formed no plans for the establishment of colonies. If German subjects, he said, founded colonies on unoccupied territory it would devolve upon the government to protect such from England. Bismarck said he feared no opposition, but strong measures of protection would be necessary against English colonists.

ARREST OF A WOULD-BE REGICIDE

BERLIN, June 23.—A young man was arrested at Ems to-day who had in his possession a revolver and a dagger and who it is believed had designs upon the life of the emperor.

CANADA

WILL ARRANGE A RECIPROCITY TREATY

OTTAWA, Ont., June 23.—It is reported the government will arrange a reciprocity treaty with the United States shortly, to be made public. The new treaty will follow the line of the former reciprocity treaty admitting natural products and some articles in an early stage of manufacture. The defeat of the Morrison tariff bill in the United States house of representatives is stated to be largely due to a renewal of negotiations.

RUSSIA

TWENTY PERSONS DROWNED

WARSAW, June 23.—Floods have destroyed the new bridge across the Vistula at Plus which was erected at a cost of 42,000 [illegible]. Crowds were standing on the bridge watching the torrent when it began to give way, and twenty persons were drowned.

THE NEW YORK PHARISEES

What Gath has to Say about Them

Gath in Cincinnati Enquirer

There is opposition to Blaine you will perceive among the self worshipers. It will amount to nothing in the long run. Most of the republicans are heartily glad to see the hitherto respectable renegades and apostates strut out and show their backs. No injury can happen to upright republicans from a defeat at the polls. The persons who will be wiped out will be these renegades with whom gentlemen will be hereafter afraid to meet. Politics is the next thing to war. When a man is intrusted with a political part to play he has been given an honor which he should be as careful about as if his daughter or wife were concerned. Sent to a convention to do the august work of nominating a ruler of the country, the man who resorts to the idea that he can put the knife to the nomination is an assassin. It makes no difference what his past record has been, how loudly he cried for freedom from the rear and stay-at-home during the conflict. The gentleness of his diction and features cannot obscure the fact that in all the elements of patriotism, obedience and loyalty he is a failure and a liar.

Several years ago I trained with reformers and a more cold hearted pack of scoundrels I never knew. They were nearly all egotists with but little balance of character and that is why they preferred to be reformers rather than upright partisans. Some little kink or scruple or [illegible] seemed to them bigger than the great [illegible]. Sometimes they had not been satisfied; at other times they had done some frightful violence to human nature and could not support the nomination because they were conscious of their own inhumanity. It matters nothing to the young men who have acted with the republican party if Blaine is beaten; they can fall into line behind their chief magistrate whatever be his party relations. But assassinating Mr Blaine will be an end to civil service reform pretensions in this country. If this respecting of persons is to demolish our convention popular system let the egotists fall into the ditch they have dug. Blaine is too much of a man to please any eunuch. It has been his misfortune at different times in his life to entertain at his house and table some of these reformers—men who are essentially spies by nature and only know a gentleman for the purpose of reporting something against him.

Harper's Weekly has become of late the instrument of Mr Curtis, a man whose political success has borne no proportion to his political pretension. His avoidance of personality has modified the views of many writers toward him, but he has before him only two results that I can see, provided he is successful, and it must be a dismal prospect to him to succeed in either. He may assist to defeat the republican party. He certainly will destroy the civil service reform theory. The republicans will care nothing on this subject hereafter when the arch prophet of it has become a renegade to his own party.

Tanning Human Skin

Scottish Leather Trader

Several articles of public utility are now being systematically and profitably manufactured in London out of the human skin. An exhibition has just taken place in which twenty four exhibits appeared, all of this costly leather. The exhibitor was not a Yankee, but an enterprising Scotchman. He gave a lecture on his exhibit, in which he claimed that our hides make the very best of leather for general use. The pieces exhibited were especially elegant, and not only ornamental but serviceable enough for the most utilitarian. They were subjected to the roughest usage and bore the handling well. He also showed gloves tough enough for the most thorough bred prize fighter. The exhibitor said the skins of lazy and aristocratic people were inferior to those of the poorer classes for tanners' use.

Letter from Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

BROOKLYN, N Y, March 26, 1884.

I have used Allcock's Plasters for some years for myself and family, and, as far as able, for the many sufferers who come to us for assistance and have found them a genuine relief for most of the aches and pains which flesh is heir to. I have used Allcock's Plasters for all kind of lameness and acute pain, and, by frequent experiments, find that they can control many cases not noticed in your circulars.

Arrival of Another Shipload of Recruits for Utah.

A YOUNG WOMAN BURIED IN A TRANCE.

More Recruits for Salt Lake

NEW YORK, June 23.—Twenty five Mormon missionaries with 401 converts (301 Scandinavians and 100 English) arrived to-day by the steamship Arizona en route to Salt Lake City under charge of Chief Elder Nye. As the steamer reached the dock roll call was held and each elder was detailed to his respective post. Elder C H Nye said: "The converts I bring are not all recent accessions, some having been members of the church over thirty years, who through lack of means or other causes have been unable to come here sooner. I am now going back to Utah to remain there and within a short time of our arrival a further relay of elders will be sent to Europe to keep up the work. I consider that I have been very successful."

Referring to the arrest of Mormon missionaries in Vienna Mr Nye says: "I do not contemplate any serious outcome from it. Austria is very intolerant. I look upon the trouble as only temporary and as doing our church more good than harm."

Nye, on being questioned in regard to the number of each sex he has with him, was very reluctant. Women formed a majority of his party.

Buried Alive.

WHEELING, June 23.—[Special.]—The ghastly history of a premature burial has just come to light. A young bride of thirty was interred in May of last year. On exhuming the remains last week for removal to another cemetery the friends were horrified to find the body turned over, the hands filled with long tufts of hair and the face, neck and bosom scratched and scarred. The lining of the coffin was torn into fragments in the desperate efforts of the entombed victim to escape. Since the discovery the young husband has been prostrated and his life is despaired of. The name is withheld.

Big Strike of Coal Miners

COLUMBUS, June 23.—The remainder of the miners in the Hocking valley came out to-day against a reduction of 10 cents. Thirty two mines are now closed, including those of the Ohio coal exchange, the Columbus and Hocking Coal and Iron Company, the Upson Coal Company, the Shawnee Coal and Iron Company, the [illegible] mines and Goshen & Berbers and W A Blood's mines. About 5000 men are thus thrown out of employment, besides those living along railroads tributary to the coal region. The mines above enumerated embrace the Hocking valley and Shawnee fields.

Retire from Business

CHICAGO, June 23.—The secretary of the board of trade announced on change this morning that the firm of C J Kershaw & Co., one of the largest exporting and commission houses in the city, had given up all their trade and would settle all differences at their office. It was rumored that the firm had failed but they assert their ability to meet all demands in full.

Failure at Chicago

CHICAGO, June 23.—The Brown & Vanarsdal manufacturing company made an assignment to-day. Liabilities $110,000; assets $200,000. The company is a manufacturer of cast iron wagon material. The failure is due to their inability to meet certain debts about to accrue.

Mission Brig Lost

BOSTON, June 23.—A dispatch received by the American board of commissioners of foreign missions dated Hong Kong June 21 announces the total loss of the missionary brig Morning Star at Kusaie. The crew and the passengers were saved.

To-day's Weather

WASHINGTON, June 23.—North Pacific coast: light rain and partly cloudy weather. California: generally fair weather.

Chicago Grain Market.

CHICAGO, June 23.—Wheat is stronger: 86½c for June, [illegible] for July. Barley is dull and nominal at 62@65c.

Minister Wallace Arrives

NEW YORK, June 23.—General Wallace, United States minister to Turkey, and wife arrived to-day.

IN WALL STREET

The Air Filled with Bearish Rumors and Stocks Close Lower

NEW YORK, June 23.—Governments were weak; there was no demand and a decline of ¼ to ½ per cent. There was no demand for the bonds of railroads, which were weak and lower.

The stock market opened firm and prices rose ¼ to 1½ per cent, Union Pacific and Lake Shore being the features. Soon after the opening a selling movement set in which lasted with few interruptions until after 1 P M. Reports affecting the credit of prominent capitalists and financial institutions were freely circulated. The reports in each case proved unfounded. Money was in good demand, and the rate was bid up to 4 per cent. Lackawanna was exceptionally strong and closed ¼ per cent higher for the day. The weakest stocks were St Paul, Northwestern, Western Union, Quincy, Illinois Central, Chicago and Alton and Canada Southern. In the afternoon money became easier and stocks firmer and prices rallied ½ to [illegible] per cent. In the final dealings this movement was partially lost, but the market closed steady. Compared with Saturday's closing, prices are ¼ to 1 per cent lower. A few shares commanded a bonus for use.

MONEY, BONDS AND STOCKS

NEW YORK, June 23.—Money after advancing to 4 closed offered 2. Prime paper, 5@6. Sterling exchange, bankers' bills weak and lower at $4 83¼; exchange demand $4 84¾.

Bonds—4s 118¾; 4½s 112½; 3s 101; Pacific 6s 125.

Stocks—American 85; Canada Pacific [illegible]; Canada Southern 30½; Central Pacific 35½; Burlington [illegible]; Lackawanna 103¾; Denver & Rio Grande [illegible]; Erie 11; Hannibal & St Joe 36¾; Kansas & Texas 11; Lake Shore [illegible]; Louisville & Nashville [illegible]; Michigan Central [illegible]; Northern Pacific [illegible]; Northern Pacific preferred 41[illegible]; Northwestern 88; New York Central [illegible]; Oregon Navigation [illegible]; Oregon and Transcontinental [illegible]; Oregon Improvement [illegible]; Pacific Mail [illegible]; Panama [illegible]; Rock Island [illegible]; St Paul [illegible]; Texas Pacific 7½; Union Pacific [illegible]; U S [illegible]; Wells Fargo [illegible]; Western Union [illegible]; Petroleum firm at [illegible].

NEW YORK, June 23.—Rumors telegraphed west respecting failures and embarrassments of leading merchants and business men here have no foundation whatever so far as the most vigorous inquiry can discover. The president of the Standard Oil company scouts the idea that he is in trouble and Huntington merely smiles at the anxious inquirers who visit him asking about his alleged troubles.

WALL STREET NOTES

NEW YORK, June 23.—Money is stringent at 10@15 per cent per annum.

General Palmer has resigned from the directory of the Rio Grande.

Huntington says the installments of the Morgan Railroad and Steamship Company payable by him and associates will be promptly met and that the next payment will not mature until July, when it will be paid in cash as every obligation for which he and his associates are responsible.

MR. HUNTINGTON INTERVIEWED

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—Rumors of financial troubles having overtaken C P Huntington were renewed in Wall street to-day. The rumor stated definitely that his paper and that of Solon Humphreys had gone to protest. Huntington, when spoken to on the subject, said: "Do you know, I feel ashamed of myself when I contradict such a pack of lies. The truth is something entirely unknown to some people in the street; that the story is simply absurd."

CRIMINAL CALENDAR

CRIME IN TEXAS

DALLAS, June 23.—The grand jury to-day returned twelve new bills—one against J. Baum and eleven against Lohnstein, in the [illegible] swindling cases; both were rearrested and gave bonds. The old cases were dismissed.

In the case of the death of Gaspar Wharton the coroner's jury this evening returned a verdict of death by an overdose of morphine, by whom administered unknown. Frank Campbell, a former associate of Wharton's, was arrested and remanded without bail to await the action of the grand jury.

A PREACHER IN TROUBLE

SAN ANTONIO, June 23.—[Special.]—Mrs. Williams, wife of a popular Baptist preacher, died recently leaving $10,000 in gold, which she kept near her person, and which has since disappeared. Williams had her son by a former husband arrested and charged with the theft, but he strenuously denied the charge. Now it is supposed that Williams himself abstracted the money. The affair has caused a sensation here. Much sympathy is expressed for the young son, who is an invalid.

SHOT DEAD BY A GUARD

LITTLE ROCK, June 23.—John Burns, recently sent to the penitentiary for safe blowing, from Miller county, was shot dead by the guard this morning while endeavoring to escape from the stockade at Lewisburg. Burns formerly was a contractor on the Texas and Pacific railway.

THE FIRE RECORD

SLIGHT FIRES AT NEW YORK

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—Slight fires occurred yesterday in the Brooklyn Catholic cathedral and in the marine hospital at Staten Island. At the latter place there was considerable excitement, because the people thought it was the work of the vigilance committee as in 1858. An alarm was also sent out about midnight from the Hotel Richmond, Broadway and Eleventh street. There was considerable excitement, and the occupants were all awakened and prepared to evacuate. The fire department was out in full force, but the damage was trifling.

BIG BLAZE AT SHENANDOAH

SHENANDOAH, Pa., June 23.—A serious fire is burning in the southern part of town that threatens to be very destructive.

The fire has destroyed seventeen tenements occupied by at least [illegible] Hungarians and four other families. One woman was seriously burned.

FOREST FIRES IN MAINE

CALAIS, Me., June 23.—Forest fires are raging north, east and west of this city and spreading rapidly. The city is surrounded with dense smoke. A large gang of men are at work and more start to-night and to-morrow to fight the flames.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE BICYCLE CIRCUMNAVIGATOR.

DES MOINES, June 23.—Thomas Stephens, who started from San Francisco two months ago for a bicycle tour around the world, arrived here this afternoon in good health and spirits. He will continue the trip to-morrow morning.

NEWS OF THE NORTHWEST.

Eastern Oregon

Most of the buildings recently destroyed by fire at Summerville are being rebuilt.

Over 18,000 sheep will be driven to Wyoming this summer from Umatilla county.

Ed Hart of the Wallowa valley is reported as having killed 74 squirrels in three hours.

The Mountain Sentinel says that R R and J P Smith have sold their band of cattle (1400) to Wood & Strang of Reno, Nev., for $40,000. The cattle are now on their range on the Malheur and will be delivered about the 1st of September.

Montana.

On Monday the Lexington mine shipped ten bars of bullion valued at $17,000.

Track laying is now progressing on both branches of the Utah and Northern to the Anaconda mine and smelter.

A miners' union is to be organized at Butte. Over 700 names have already been obtained of those who desire to join.

The new banking house at Cooke City was opened one evening last week with a dance, which was broken up by a general fight growing out of some trifling matter. When the fight was ended the sheriff had one prisoner and [illegible] revolvers, but several individuals including the deputy sheriff were next day arrested and fined.

The territory lying between the Yellowstone, Missouri and Musselshell rivers, being a triangle and bounded on the three sides by these rivers (in which over 200,000 buffalo have grazed), makes the finest round up in known stock countries. There is scarcely any possibility of this vast range being crowded for the next twenty years.

A correspondent of the Sun River Sun writing from Blackfeet agency says: Things are in a deplorable condition here. A starving Indian is a fearful foe. We are more secure from the Crees than from these Indians. Lieutenant Ball and his command will remain here until a better state of affairs dawns on the agency. He does not deem us safe under existing circumstances. The worst has never been told. Ex agent John Young should have made an estimate for more than one eighth ration. He alone is responsible for the wretchedness and starvation here. We behold the suffering and are unable to relieve it. As high as four Indians a day are dying. They say "the white man!" Not by his gun or his knife, but by his neglect and ill treatment in neglecting to furnish them the sustenance which is their due by treaty with him.

The Benton River Press says: The wool growers of the territory tributary to Fort Benton should be "rustling" about this time to finish shearing and getting their clips to market in good season for shipment. There are not as many boats on the river this year as last and for that reason it is desired to have the bulk of the wool on the levee as early as possible. The indications of a late river were never better; still the wool grower should take the extra precaution to be here just as soon as he possibly can.

A special dispatch to the Helena Herald from Garrison under date June 20 says: Cole's circus train left Deer Lodge yesterday about 2 o'clock A M. When about two miles from town five pistol shots were heard by one of the showmen and a search of the train revealed the fact that the head brakeman named John Edwards had been murdered. He was found on top of a stock car lying face down with his feet hanging over the edge of the car. When the body was found the face and hands were cold but the body was still warm. On examination it was found that he had been shot through the right breast just left of the nipple with a forty five calibre pistol and instantly killed. His clothes were burnt showing the murderer was near him when he fired the fatal shot. The face and head were somewhat beaten and bloody. The only possible clue to the perpetrator was on the testimony of one of the canvasmen of the show, who had seen a cold man and boy who had been beating their way with the circus for some days talking with the murdered man just before the train started. This was the last seen of Edwards alive. Several persons were arrested on suspicion but have been released as there was no evidence to implicate them. The feeling among railroad men here is intense and if the murderer could have been found he would no doubt have been treated to a [illegible].

HUMOR

[illegible] for a legacy of people [illegible]

A German company was conducting one of its overtures. As the horns play it to [illegible] the [illegible] repeatedly, [illegible] softly and more softly they played each time. At the fourth repetition with a wink at the [illegible] they put their instruments to their lips but did not blow at all. The conductor nodded approvingly. "Very good indeed. Now once again softer and you will have it."

A Brooklyn clergyman declares that the scriptural [illegible] would be incomplete without a [illegible]. An [illegible] history has been charitable enough to ignore it.

"Papa's Home to-night" is the title of a new song. So the old man has yielded at last. Let's see. It must be about fifteen years since they began to coax him with "Father, Dear Father, Come Home."

Two lovers agreed to commit suicide at the same hour the other night. Next morning both were up an hour earlier than usual to look over the paper, and their disappointment and disgust at not [illegible] the other was too deep for utterance.

During these cool breezy mornings when the air appears fresher and the fields are bespangled with dew diamonds [illegible], how pleasant it is just as the first streaks of daylight steal through the shutters for the refreshed reinvigorated sleeper to turn over in bed and take another nap.

The other day a visitor surprised a distinguished professor who was saying to his baby: "Oh my [illegible] toosey tootsies." Just then he caught sight of the visitor, blushed and muttered: "No, no, you must not expose your pedal extremities by extending them beyond the protecting covering of the blanket or you will lay your system open to attacks of catarrhal affection."

There were five young ladies, all sisters, and known as the Misses Murphy. He was a bashful young fellow and was very sweet on one of the girls but didn't like to propose. He had been invited to dinner one Sunday, and during the meal the eldest, noticing that he had finished all his meat, said: "Will you have a little more meat, Harry?" "No thanks," he replied, but he continued: "I don't mind taking a Murphy," and he cast his eye from the table to the idol of his affections.

Dogs in Shakespeare.—At a dinner not long ago Lord Nugent, the greatest Shakespearean scholar of his day, affirmed that there was not in the whole series of the plays a single passage commending directly or indirectly the moral qualities of the dog. Thinking this to be impossible, Sir Henry Holland accepted the wager which Lord Nugent had offered him on the subject, with the concession of a year to make his search. Even with the aid of several friends he failed to find any such passage, and at the close of the year he paid the guinea he had lost.

The Brighton Herald tells the following [illegible] sometimes give evidence of an intelligence [illegible] worthy of a better cause. A burglar concealed under the bed of a [illegible] betrayed his presence, the noise he made being sufficient to make the wife call her husband's attention to the sound. "It's only one of the dogs," was the sleepy answer, and snapping his fingers he called by its name one of his favorites who was supposed to be present. The thief was [illegible] of mind, did not desert him, though on the brink of discovery, for divining the situation at once he immediately licked the extended hand in the hope of confirming the gentleman's surmise. The clever ruse was not, however, we believe, successful, though one might say it deserved to be for its boldness and ingenuity.

Lady [illegible]'s grandmother and the highwaymen. So great was her confidence in herself that one dark evening, having to return from some excursion across Hounslow heath—at that time infested by highwaymen—she laughed to scorn the warnings she received on the road and the terrors of her two men servants, and in the very center of the heath was stopped by three footpads. She held one a moment in parley and threw him off his guard, kicked the other [illegible], drove gallantly over the third and arrived in London with spirits sufficiently composed to dress for a party and relate her adventure in illustration of the truth that a woman with her wits about her and the whip hand disengaged is a match for three men any day in the year.

PRESS PITH

Something under. Thus according to the January statement the interest bearing debt of the United States is something under $1,3[illegible],000,000.—New England [illegible].

"Yes indeed, she's a daisy," remarked a young broker discussing the charms of a certain young lady. "She gazes you apparently," replied his friend.—[illegible] Herald.

Mrs. Horace Greeley had an antipathy for kid gloves—she would never put them on. A correspondent describes a bout she had with Margaret Fuller on this subject. We all met on the street and instead of saying "good morning" or some such human salutation Mrs Greeley touched Margaret's hand with a little shudder and said, "Skin of a beast! Skin of a beast!" "Why, what do you wear?" inquired the astonished maiden from Massachusetts. "Silk," said Mrs Greeley, reaching out her hand. Margaret just touched it and shuddered, crying, "Entrails of a worm! Entrails of a worm!"

A good story comes from an Anglo-Indian station. A sub-lieutenant took sick leave and spent his leisure in the hills preliminary to getting married. The colonel heard of the indiscretion and peremptorily telegraphed, "Join at once." With the fatal order in his hand, the youth proceeded to say farewell to his betrothed. But the lady was more intelligent in military matters. "I am glad that the colonel approves the match," she said, "but why is he in such a hurry?" The sub-lieutenant was still too literal for the fair one, who had further to explain that the "Join at once" meant "marry immediately." The result was that in forty eight hours the colonel received the following reply per telegraph: "Your orders are obeyed. We were joined at once."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"I must have some rest this summer," said the clock. "I am all run down." "I think I need a country seat," said the easy chair, leaning on his elbow. "I am getting played out," said the piano. "A little fresh air would be a good thing for me." "That's what I want," said the sofa, "a little fresh hair in the springs." "I should like to go with the sofa and lounge in the woods," said the footstool. "If my legs were stronger," said the table, "I should go to the country for some leaves." "Country board is always so plain," growled the sideboard. "Nothing that is knobby or polished there." "Let me reflect," said the mirror, "they have very plain looking glasses there, too, do they not?" "You make me plush," said the divan—and here the house maid closed the folding doors and shut them all up.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

POLITICAL NEWS AND GOSSIP.

Tilden's Supporters Refuse to Take No for an Answer.

CLEVELAND'S FRIENDS CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS

Mackay will Enter the Lists Against Jones of Nevada—Connecticut Independents hold a Meeting

Among the Democrats

WASHINGTON, June 23.—[Special.]—A prominent democratic senator who returned from the visit to Washington in conversation with your correspondent said: "It looks very much as though Tammany Hall intends making trouble for the democratic party at Chicago. While I favor the nomination of Bayard and believe him the strongest man by all odds that we could select, I am certain that a very large majority of the democrats in New York desire Cleveland nominated. Tammany went to the Saratoga convention and was given greater representation than she originally demanded. The organization took part and acquiesced in everything. I have good information that Tammany is now working to secure the repeal of the unit rule adopted by the state convention."

"Why did not the Cleveland men instruct for him at Saratoga if they were in a pronounced majority?" asked the correspondent.

"For the excellent reason that it was inexpedient to attempt to instruct the delegation. Had instructions been attempted undoubtedly there would have been some opposition, and straightway the report would have been circulated that the New York democracy was divided. As it was Tammany was admitted with a larger representation than it expected and they adopted the unit rule. No language can too strongly condemn the persistent hostile attitude of Tammany to the known wishes of the democratic voters of New York. Notwithstanding Tammany's conduct I believe Cleveland's friends will be able to hold out against the organization successfully and that he will be nominated upon the second or third ballot."

TILDEN TO BE FORCED

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—Truth, in a double leaded editorial, urges the democrats to insist on Tilden's nomination. It says Cleveland cannot command the support of the jarring factions. His veto of the five cent fare bill has been so assiduously used against him among the working men of this city that it is an insurmountable obstacle. Tilden must be nominated either with his consent or without it. The consequences can be safely left with the Almighty. He is the only democrat who can be elected.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23.—[Special.]—There is a growing feeling here among democrats that the presidential nomination should be forced upon Tilden. Many prominent democrats say that the division among the republicans in the east over Blaine's candidacy affords the democrats a supreme opportunity and that it is the duty of Tilden, as the pre-eminent democrat of the nation and the only man whose nomination would please everybody, to reconsider his refusal to be a candidate. This feeling has been strongly reinforced by the publication this afternoon of an editorial from the New York Truth showing that the nomination will be forced upon Tilden.

KELLY AND TAMMANY HALL

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—World's Washington special: It is reported among democratic congressmen and others here that John Kelly and Tammany Hall have called a meeting of prominent democrats in New York this week for the purpose of consultation regarding the presidential nomination. The movement is supposed to be intended as the inauguration of opposition to Cleveland's nomination and is alleged to be incited by a desire to justify a rebellion against the unit rule in the New York delegation in case a majority of the delegates should be found in favor of Cleveland. It is not known who are invited, but Morrison, Carlisle, Bayard and [illegible] are said to be among the number [illegible] trade [illegible].

Political Points

[illegible] THE ADMINISTRATION [illegible]

WASHINGTON, June 23.—[Special.]—The statement has been made that the president and members of the cabinet have assumed a rather indifferent attitude towards the republican ticket, the basis for this view being that the candidates have received no assurance from any member of the administration of their support further than the rather formal telegram which the president sent to Blaine immediately on his nomination. It is further cited as an additional ground for the belief that the present administration is rather lukewarm towards the candidates, that none of the members of the cabinet were present at the ratification held at the city hall last week and that they made no responses to the invitation. The attention of a member of the cabinet was called to these statements this morning by a correspondent, and he at once said: "If there is any one of the [illegible] opposed to the candidates and does not intend to support them in the coming canvass I have yet to hear of such a one. Any statement that intends to convey the opposite impression is erroneous and has no foundation as far as I know. As to the members of the cabinet not attending the ratification meeting, that is very easily accounted for. Our invitations stated that we would be expected to speak, but I received an intimation from friends of Blaine, and I suppose all did, that it had been concluded not to include members of the cabinet among the speakers. I did not suppose it was necessary that I should attend and did not do so. It was understood among those who had charge of the meeting, and there had been a desire to have letters of regret read at the meeting, as is done sometimes, I suppose that we would have been so informed."

MACKAY WANTS TO BE A SENATOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23.—[Special.]—It is reported that the recent visit of Mr Mackay to this coast was to lay wires for the senatorial fight in Nevada. The possession of boundless wealth and the charms of world wide notoriety have ceased to satisfy Mackay's ambition, and he longs to crown his career with office. The seat which Mackay desires is now occupied by Jones, who of course is a candidate for re-election, and the contest between these money kings promises to be the most lavish struggle in the history of Nevada, and this is saying a good deal. Besides his own ample resources Jones will be backed by the great monopoly interests of the country, and if he dies he must he will die hard. Mackay has always maintained a nominal residence in Nevada, although he much lives in New York and Paris. It is said that he will throw into the contest all the money that may be needed to win, and the fight if it shall come off will certainly be an exciting and shameful one. Nevada grows leaner and leaner in ability to pay. The population of Virginia City has dwindled to less than 5000 and all the other towns are shrunken as well. The statehood of Nevada is a miserable farce and its failure all [illegible].

[illegible]

NEW HAVEN, June 23.—The republican independents met to-night and organized with Simeon E Baldwin as chairman. Rev. Stuart Means, Simeon E Baldwin, [illegible] and others made addresses. Resolutions were adopted that the national republican convention at Chicago has in its platform departed from the principles on which the party was founded and from the purposes for which the party exists; that the convention has still further disappointed those who desire a pure administration and [illegible] the standard of politics by the nomination of James G Blaine and John A Logan; that it is the true duty of every man who is in sympathy with the principles of republicanism to stand by these principles [illegible]; that those candidates are unworthy of our support; that a committee be appointed by the chairman, which committee shall in turn report a standing committee of twenty five including themselves, the number to correspond with other bodies of republican or independent voters who may be in sympathy with our views and to represent the sentiment of this meeting at any general conference which may be called.

[illegible] THE HERALD

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—Herald's editorial: The west, the reckless and unscrupulous elements of the west have now seized control of the effete and corrupt republican party. Blaine is the candidate of the sectional south and the rowdy elements. Let the democrats appeal to the men they nominate to the whole country, to the east, the middle states and the south, as well as to the conservative elements of the west which were ridden down rough shod the other day by the nomination of Blaine and Logan. It is better for the country, the people of the whole nation, to decide this question now in the ballot box peacefully than later with rifles in their hands.

THE COUNTY DEMOCRACY

NEW YORK, June 23.—At a meeting of the county democracy to-night it was announced that the 60 members would go to the democratic convention at Chicago. Commissioner Thompson introduced a resolution instructing the representatives of the several districts to organize Cleveland clubs and to form a general club when they reached Chicago. Colonel John R Fellows, district attorney, favored the resolution. He said he believed that two thirds of the delegates from New York were in favor of Cleveland. He was the best man the democracy had seen since the time of Andrew Jackson.

FROM MAINE

PHILADELPHIA, June 23.—[Special.]—Press Augusta special: Tom Sherman is here from Washington to take charge of Blaine's private matters. Blaine will continue on his history at convenient intervals. An efficient corps of stenographers and clerks will be organized this week to aid the work. Blaine leaves town Thursday to attend the Bates college commencement.

LEWISTON, Maine, June 23.—[Special.]—Blaine and wife leave this evening for New York.

A TRUANT COMES HOME

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—The Commercial this evening swings around fully into the support of Blaine and the republican party. It says: "We hope to show soon that the issues of the campaign are not likely to be made by any individual or any small coterie of individuals, but by the great parties themselves, and that they will not turn upon personalities."

WILL NOTIFY LOGAN

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The committee appointed by the republican national convention to notify Blaine and Logan of their nomination will call upon Senator Logan to-morrow and formally notify him that he has been selected to fill the second place upon the republican presidential ticket.

CHANGES IN THE SENATE

NEW YORK, June 23.—[Special.]—The Sun, speaking of the changes in the senate next year, says: "Mackay will endeavor to succeed Jones of Nevada. A part of the republican bargain in New York is to allow Conkling to be re-elected."

STATE CONVENTION CALLED

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23.—At a meeting of the republican state central committee this afternoon it was decided to hold a state convention at Sacramento July 2[illegible] for the purpose of nominating electors and congressmen and electing a new state central committee.

THE PECULIARITIES

Of some of the Prominent Men of the House and Senate—Queer Things which our Wiseacres do in the Halls of National Legislation

Washington Cor. Baltimore American.

The London Truth has been amusing itself and its readers by noting some of the peculiarities of prominent men in public life in England. The great men in this country have their peculiarities as well as those of other countries. An hour in the house will demonstrate that fact to any close observer. For instance it is not an uncommon thing to see a member of the house while in his seat scratch his head, clean and pare his nails, run his hands through his hair, tickle his ear with a feather or do any other absent minded trick which might seem out of place elsewhere.

Reagan of Texas, for instance, the ex postmaster general of the confederacy, is never at his best unless he has a short string with the ends tied together, with which he may employ his hands pulling and twisting and working it after the "cat's cradle" fashion. If he does not have the string his next choice is some loose pieces of paper which he tears into bits, scattering them about him until the floor in his vicinity looks as though a sort of blizzard had struck it.

Hewitt of New York has a queer habit of crossing his legs when he talks. He usually gets into an aisle between the seats and putting his hands on a desk on each side of him crosses his legs as he stands. When he gets warmed up he can stand with his legs crossed without holding on to the desk.

Judge Kelley, who is the central figure on the republican side, does not talk much nowadays. He is getting pretty old and recognizes this fact. The last time he made a set speech in the house he began by saying that he did not know whether or not his strength would be sufficient to carry him through. He has a wonderfully strong voice for one of his slight physique and can make himself heard in every corner of the great hall.

Tom Reed of Maine, who sits near Kelley, has a very incisive manner, and is probably as much at home on his feet as any other man in the house. He is never flurried. He is not an orator and does not indulge much in gestures when he speaks, but his antagonist is usually glad when he sits down. He has a way of saying cutting things and can be severe as well as witty when occasion requires.

Frank Hurd of Ohio has a curious way of flinging his arms out at right angles with his body, giving him the appearance of a flying machine. He walks with a cane, usually, one leg being considerably shorter than its fellow, and finds a difficulty in standing without it on any other occasion than that of speech making. When he gets warmed up in his speech, however, he forgets cane and leg and everything else, and the way his arms fly is a caution to those within reach of them.

Holman, the objector, seldom strikes out from the shoulder in making his gestures as do most orators. Nearly all his gestures are simply by the motion of the hand or at least of the arm from the elbow down. He has a very funny way of checking up his sentences, spectacles in hand, with a chopping motion of the right hand which is rather amusing to the observer but quite annoying to the gentleman who wants to get a little bill through and cannot because of Holman's objection.

Hewitt of Alabama is a queer looking man at best, but when he is making a speech he certainly presents a very peculiar appearance. He has a way of pinching up his hand as if it were half full of salt and of stretching it out, in making gestures, as if he were trying to drop some of the salt on the bird's tail, and of then drawing it back quickly as if his fingers had been pricked.

General Tom Browne of Indiana never began a speech in his life unless both hands were rammed down in his breeches pockets, and he never takes more than one of them out at a time for the purpose of gesticulation.

But it is the greatest and only Belford who has the most particular way of his own in addressing the house. He was never known to stand by his own desk. He always takes possession of the aisle adjoining and sometimes he traverses two or three aisles in the course of his remarks. Belford uses swine legs, large coat tails and in fact every available adjunct to oratory, and that it is perhaps that his utterances [illegible] so much attention. [illegible] has often been remarked that his speeches sound much better than they read.

In the senate there are quite as many peculiarities as in the house. A visitor in the gallery of the senate may often hear the rattling of a bunch of keys on the floor. He may then be sure that either Ben Harrison of Indiana or Senator Hoar of Massachusetts are sitting quietly in their seats. Both of these gentlemen seem to be best able to unlock their thoughts by rattling their keys in a listless way.

Senator Groome of Maryland has a great way of whirling his chair around [illegible] back toward the presiding officer [illegible] sit and read or talk to his neighbor for half an hour at a time. Senator Pendleton is [illegible] man [illegible] way turns his chair always [illegible] keeps his eye on the ladies' gallery.

Senator Sawyer, when he presses his rotund [illegible] and rests on the sides [illegible] his duties with [illegible]

[illegible] pushing his [illegible] Edmunds when [illegible] to keep from going to sleep, or [illegible] succeeds.

Something Else Wanted

Detroit Free Press

A [illegible] dealer in windmills had a visitor the other day who looked at one of the machines all over with a critical eye and asked numerous questions about how long it would last and what it could be expected to do. Seemingly satisfied on these points he said:

"Well, the price is reasonable enough, but now let's see what it will cost for a steam engine to drive it."

An [illegible] army surgeon tells the following story of the battle of Chickamauga: The hottest part of the fight was on Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday night we were expecting to renew the fight the next day. I turned to Mr M—. Says I: "Andrew, look in that ambulance and you will find a two-gallon jug. Take it down in yonder ravine and bring it full of water. If any of the boys get hurt to-morrow they might suffer for water." He took the jug and went off, and I neither heard nor saw anything of Andrew till Tuesday morning after the fight was over. He came up almost breathless with the jug of water. "Doctor," says he, "I have found the water at last. I would have brought it if it had taken me three weeks to find it."

Ixtaccihuatl, which, next to Popocatepetl, is the highest volcano in Mexico, is universally called the white woman of the land of the Montezumas. Its shape, as viewed from Popocatepetl some 30 miles away, is suggestive of a dead giantess robed for burial, the white shroud showing the contour of breasts and limbs. The face is perfect in outline and long hair seems to stream in silvery locks from the snowy forehead down over the sides of the bier. Her feet are turned toward Popocatepetl and between them lies a line of low hills brown and treeless.

MRS. MACKAY'S PICTURE

Labouchere in London Truth

Meissonier is in the habit of being a recluse [illegible] and refused not ask to be flattered. Now he has lately painted both as well as middle aged and elderly gentlemen. Although his dear and almost life long friend the late Victor [illegible] was disfigured by the want of an eye he did not, in portraying him, take a side view. On rare, very rare occasions he was accused of embellishing women. But he was much younger when he incurred the reproach, and the heart perhaps affected his vision. Sir Joshua Reynolds resolved never to get himself out from the hour in which he found that painting portraits of ladies was his true vocation. He thus retained until an advanced time of life the capacity to see them with a lover's [illegible]. They were portrayed as his fancy painted them and the witchcraft of the tender passion still hangs about their images.

Meissonier is tired of seeing painted and powdered lady Jezebels in the great salons he frequents. He is 7[illegible] years old and has never understood the wax doll's style of prettiness. He abhors those aids to beauty to which fashionable belles nearly always resort and sees through them at once. It would give him far more pleasure to draw a homely old woman with a good and interesting face than the traits of the lady Jezebels aforesaid. Meissonier thinks it a compliment to the intellect of the sitter to be truthful. In all his previous dealings with Americans he found that sincerity answered. Said Meissonier to me: "Mrs Mackay has a very agreeable face and piquancy. She did not need to be idealized to make a charming picture. On the contrary, my idea was to give her immortality by stripping her of what was adventitious and bring out what was permanent and thoroughly personal." Every truth that he could tell pictorially about her was in his opinion bonne à dire. She never complained of his sincerity in any of her visits to his studio and she did not forbid him to retain her portrait at the Triennial salon after it was agreed to prolong the period during which that exhibition was to be kept open.

As to the price, Meissonier takes 4[illegible],000 francs for a portrait like that of M. Victor Lefranc, in which the head is everything and the dress the upper part of a frock coat. He had not only to portray Mrs Mackay, but her Rembrandt hat and feathers, a rich cloak, a rose in her breast, a dress rich in falbalas [illegible] to harmonize with them, and a pair of Mousquetaire Swedish gloves. As he took a fancy to the work on which he was engaged it became a labor of love to him, though not in the Sir Joshua sense. The effect of every tiny touch was calculated, and the greatest care taken to prevent details from spoiling the ensemble and to let in "plenty of air" upon the whole. Knowing how men suddenly rise to wealth and come down with crashes in the United States, Meissonier used to say to those around him: "It is possible that a hundred years hence nobody will remember that there ever was a bonanza silver king or a Mackay family, but the whole world, I like to think, will have in its mind's eye the lady in the Rembrandt hat." The artist never worked so hard for immortality. The fates resolved that his chef d'oeuvre was not to live a year, and it was exhibited in a season when everybody was out of town.

LANGTRY STILL THE REIGNING SENSATION AT SAN FRANCISCO

Cold, Rainy Weather Discourages California People—News Items from British Columbia—The Cedar River Extension

Langtry Makes a Big Hit

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23.—[Special.]—Mrs. Langtry's engagement at the Baldwin theatre continues. The house has been filled at each performance so far and it is impossible to get seats, except for several days ahead. This is the more remarkable because all the theaters have been doing a losing business for several weeks, and for the further fact that double the usual rate of admission is charged. The people not only go to see Mrs. Langtry, but they like her. Her beauty and her talents as an actress are both admitted and applauded, and she has easily attained the position of a popular favorite. The strict privacy which she maintained during her first few days in the city gave her social value, and now that she is ready both to entertain and be entertained she has more social opportunities than she can possibly accept. There have been many reports that Freddy Gebhardt is in town incog, but they are pure fabrications published in the hope of making a sensation.

It is raining heavily to-night.

More Rain

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23.—[Special.]—It rained gently for several hours last night and this forenoon the sky is still darkly overcast and the wind strong from the south. The showers extended throughout the interior and as far south as Los Angeles, resulting in heavy damage to cut hay in the field and to standing grain. The repeated disasters have made both farmers and merchants gloomy, and business is duller in the city now than at any time during the past four months.

Summer Resorts a Failure.

[Special.]—The rains are making life a burden at the many summer resorts and hundreds are fleeing back to their comfortable city homes. At the ocean places it is raw and disagreeable and the interior resorts are equally unattractive. Yosemite is reported to be a vast mud hole, and several parties on the road to the valley have turned back.

A Young Man's Crime

SAN JOSE, June 23.—Charles Benbow, son of a well to do farmer living near Evergreen, a few days ago borrowed $2000 from James Tormey, another wealthy farmer living in the same neighborhood, giving as security warehouse receipts calling for large quantities of wheat and barley. These receipts were subsequently discovered to be forged, and young Benbow, aged about 21 years, was arrested this evening. Of the $2000 but $80 was recovered, he having squandered the remainder. He claims to have invested $1200 in the Havana lottery under the advice of a fortune teller.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY

The Cedar River Extension

SEATTLE, June 23.—[Special.]—Citizens of Seattle held a conference to-night at the chamber of commerce with John L Howard, assistant manager of the Columbia River and Puget Sound railway. The object was to obtain from Seattle people a subscription to complete the Cedar river extension of the Columbia River and Puget Sound railway to the Green river coal fields, thirty two miles from this city. Favorable action was taken and a committee appointed. The requisite amount, $7,000, can be raised, and leading citizens are satisfied the road will be completed and running by November 1. This will give Seattle an additional export of 1000 tons of bituminous coal daily from the Cedar mountain syndicate and Black Diamond mines.

A JAPANESE DINNER

How the Average English Traveler Fares on Board a Jap's Steamboat.

Illustrated English Magazine

Dinner was on the table and we would at least sit down, making talk of ghastly cheerfulness and eyeing each other suspiciously. We ate our soup and eagerly discussed its relative merits with those of various other soups we had eaten under circumstances we were at curious pains to remember and recite. Two courses followed, one of mutton, the other of veal. I forgot which was the veal, but it did not matter. It might have been called turtle fin with equal accuracy of reference to its flavor. At this stage the lady of the party entered. Another course arrived of some undistinguishable meat. I am not sure that it was not the veal back again, having passed out at one door and in at the other after the manner of an army of supers at country theaters. The young gentleman from Glasgow, who accompanied us on the voyage, though usually silent, did fairly well. He had paid for his dinner and with national aptitude he felt that the commercial transaction would not be complete unless he ate it.

Something else came on, perhaps cheese, peradventure an orange. The cook was determined to rise to the occasion and show the friends of the foreign minister what could be done on board this ship. To this end he had manufactured three small tarts, of very pale complexion, which by way of luring on the appetite had been placed on the table with the soup. These tarts were always slipping off the table, being rescued from under by somebody and replaced on the dish. I have a fancy that they were not quite so pale as when I first saw them. But with the cabin bobbing about in this style, the ceiling coming down to the floor, the floor going up to the ceiling, and occasionally the port or starboard side taking the place of the ceiling, even a tart made of tinned green gages might be excused if it gradually lost some of its fresher tints.

I had meant to sit out the young gentleman from Glasgow, but when I saw him take out one of these tarts with evident intent of eating it, I left. It was not easy to get fixed on the plate-shelf, but it was done at last and I even got to sleep. From time to time—it seemed at least every hour—I was awakened by the thud of the sea as it thundered down on deck and with a rushing noise swept backwards and forwards till it finally cleared off. Alas! for the hapless Japanese family with their frail tenement of boxes, and their poor shelter of tarpaulin. It was piteous to think how the night must have sped with them and with the other poor wretches battened down in the hold.

Living with a Broken Neck.

The Oskaloosa Messenger of Iowa has a death note about David C White, who was born in this city on May 8, 1801. Mr. White attracted a great deal of attention. In 1850 he fell on some ice, and it was thought dislocated his neck. For five years after the fall he was confined to his bed, and for over thirty years he was never without the covering for his head which served to keep it from falling on his chest. Lately, however, he could not hold it erect without aid. Even under such circumstances he carried on a large business and lived to the age of 84. The post mortem examination showed that the neck was not broken, but there was a degeneration of the spinal chord. His sufferings must have been great. He leaves a widow and two sons, and was a member of the M. E. church.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

The Daily Oregonian.

TUESDAY MORNING. JUNE 24, 1884.

THE FORMALITIES.

There is but one more formal step, so far as the republicans are concerned, before the real business of the campaign will begin. This one step is the letter of acceptance, which Mr. Blaine says will in due season be communicated.

The ceremony of formally notifying the nominee, of which a full account was given in the dispatches yesterday morning, was performed without bombast, and in excellent good taste. Mr. Henderson, the speaker on this occasion and chairman of the late republican convention, is not one of the bombastic sort, on any occasion, and in this duty he was charmingly simple and direct. Senator Henderson laid particular stress upon one feature of the late convention—the fact that a great majority of the delegates, truthfully reflecting the popular demand, were enthusiastically for Blaine. This feature was the burden of our editorial correspondence from Chicago on the day after the nomination. "The people" said the dispatch from the editor, who had been watching matters very closely "were unmistakably for Blaine from the first." General Henderson, in simple language and with a directness that occupied but few sentences, pays Mr. Blaine the highest compliment possible, by showing, what the chairman of that great convention can attest better than any one else, that at an early stage of the proceedings of the convention it became manifest that the republicans whose aid must be involved to secure success to the ticket, earnestly desired the nomination of Mr. Blaine, which was a truthful reflection of the popular demand. General Henderson did not claim that the nomination would give satisfaction to every member of the party, and he did not overlook or hesitate to discuss the little revolt in the east, comparing it to the disappointment that followed the nomination of Lincoln, though that was infinitely wider and deeper. He also mentioned, in this connection, the opposition that seemed to exist for many weeks after the nomination of Garfield in 1880, which was followed by sober second thought, and individual preferences gave way before the sense of public duty that came with reflection. The same thing will occur this year, as will be seen a month hence. Meanwhile the disappointed individuals will continue to sulk and rage, and the democrats will go on and make their nomination. The reaction will follow that performance. When the old-time republicans wake up some fine morning and find that they are regarded as a part of the great democratic spoliation gang, they will wonder how it all happened, and find twenty reasons for not following the lead of the democratic convention, where now they think they have one reason for putting themselves for a moment in the attitude in which they will be surprised and half-ashamed to find themselves after the democratic nomination.

If we could be persuaded that the New York bolters constituted the republican party, and that all those people in all the states represented at Chicago, who want Blaine for president, are bad or ignorant people, then might we join in the so-called "independent" cry. But in this case it does not look so much like independent republicanism as it does like a disposition to be individually disgruntled, and to threaten a going-over into the ranks of the democrats. Ben Butler is the only one we can think of who ever carried out such a threat and then realized anything in a party way from such an act.

But we do not believe these American people who want the thoroughly American Blaine for president are a wholesale drove of bad or ignorant people. We believe they make up the republican party in the republican states, and we have always believed that these were the best people—the men of soundest political ideas, and, on the whole, by far the most safe and competent to be entrusted with the management of national affairs. Because the convention of a party proceeds to nominate the one of two candidates for nomination who is considered by a few men the least desirable one, does it change the character of the convention? or of the party represented by the convention? It never has been so considered heretofore.

Who are the republicans, anyhow? Are there any better men among those who now bear or at any time bore the party name than John Sherman, Foraker, McKinley, Halstead and West in Ohio? one of the states that sometimes goes democratic. If there are, then we will consider the New York defection as a serious one. These men are all heartily for Blaine and Logan. Are there anywhere any better men in the republican or any other party than Senator Harrison, General Gresham, W. H. Calkins, W. W. Dudley and J. J. Brown of Indiana? If there are then we may be induced to believe that this closest of all the states will not go republican this year; but until some evidence not yet known of is produced, we shall believe that the admiration these men have for Blaine and Logan will be ample evidence to convince the old Garfield majority in Indiana that their duty lies where it did in 1880. What do the fearful ones suppose that such men as Arthur's principal friends in New York, and even the old "half-breeds," will be doing while their particular enemies, the bolters, are at work? Conkling, Fenton, Cornell, Platt, Dutcher, Robertson, Warren, Roberts and O'Brien ought to count for something, too. Here are three kinds of republicans left in New York state after the Curtis kickers have retired to their tents to sulk until after the democrats make their nomination. And when it comes to voting the ticket or working for it they are all of the same kind. Come to analyze the matter closely—come to prove it next November, it may be found that right here in New York, where all the doubt centers, the disaffection is really less considerable than ever before on a presidential year. Curtis never had the following in New York that Conkling did, and when, in the Garfield campaign, Conkling held aloof, the state went republican by twenty thousand. Is there really so much to worry about, after all?

As for Massachusetts, there is no reasonable opportunity for doubt there. She is republican, and will continue to be so. There is no time during the past ten years that Massachusetts would not have gone democratic if it had been in the power of the Springfield Republican and papers of that stamp to make it so. Once or twice, in "off years," the democrats have captured it for Butler, though not because the Republican had any influence in the matter one way or the other, except, perhaps, to act through a series of years as a disorganizer. Sometimes these sublimated newspapers are one thing and sometimes another, but Massachusetts is always republican on a presidential year. The sunflower-worshiping esthetes are not half so busy either there or in New York as the old war-horses are—the men who have attended to the matter in years past, and who will be more aided by Blaine in organizing and carrying forward the canvas than they have ever been aided by any presidential candidate before. Arthur had the "machine" in the Chicago convention, if there was anything that could be called a machine. But Blaine is the man who can manage the political strength of his party the country over better than any other living American, past or present, and it does not detract one iota from his worth as a statesman and his fitness for the presidency to say so. Emerson said: "The world is for him who will go and take it." There can be no statesmanship if it does not include the science of politics. This science our candidate and the men who will manage his campaign understand thoroughly.

The influence upon the community of such brutal exhibitions as the prize fight at the pavilion Saturday night is altogether bad, and this ought to be the last of the series. The city of Portland cannot afford to allow the morals of the young to be corrupted, as they surely are, by witnessing such scenes and by talking about them before and after their occurrence. The police officers have it in their power to prevent a repetition of those public cruelties, and the best sentiment of the city demands that they should do it.

MONTANA IN CONGRESS.

The New Northwest, of Deer Lodge, Montana, prints an abstract of the brief presented to congress by Alex. C. Botkin, in his contested case against Martin Maginnis for a seat as delegate, which shows that the election of Mr. Maginnis was secured by as bold and barefaced frauds as were ever perpetrated in this country. In Miles City 1214 votes were returned, while the entire population did not exceed 2000 men, women and children. Soldiers from Fort Keogh, in defiance of law, voted in considerable numbers. Only four or five names could be recognized by the sheriff as residents of the county, among 420 names in one of the boxes. At "Wooley's ranch, Musselshell," 113 votes were returned and canvassed, although no votes were cast there, and the returns were wholly manufactured. In fact there was no such town, village or settlement in Custer county. The same was true of the precinct known as Little Porcupine. At Glendive 540 votes were returned as the result of an election which "was a farce and a fraud in about equal proportions." In Missoula county very few of the voters in the three precincts named were in Montana for the required time preceding the election, having come up with the railroad work from Idaho and Washington. There were 961 votes cast at Thompson, Thompson River, and Horse Plains—nearly all for Maginnis—very few of which were cast by qualified voters. These votes were nearly all cast by "Hallet's army," as it was called, and these frauds were almost all the result, as it is well understood in the territory, of the determined purpose of the managers of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to secure the return of Mr. Maginnis to prevent legislation against that company. This brief shows that over 2500 fraudulent votes were returned for him, and that if the election had been honestly conducted Mr. Botkin would have had a majority of 491. The contestant closes his case by saying that the "election laws of Montana are hospitable to settlers, and liberal in all respects; but the people of the territory have too high an estimate of the elective franchise to permit it to be debauched. Elections in the past have been notably free from fraud and corruption. To this rule the election of 1882 formed a monstrous exception. The honest citizens of the territory saw their will defeated by the unlawful votes of a horde of non-residents, and by even more flagrant frauds. It is not surprising that they were moved to burning indignation, which is by no means circumscribed by party lines. The contestant feels that he is less a party in interest in this case than a trustee who appears on behalf of the people of Montana, who have been impudently and defiantly outraged and defrauded." It is not expected that the house will act favorably upon this case, and we do not understand that the influential republicans of the territory are pushing the contest with any vigor. Montana is not the only place where working for a railroad company includes voting for it, nor the only place where the managers of railroads and other large corporations are unscrupulous in the exercise of power, even to the invasion of the most sacred rights of a free people.

NEW ENGLAND MORALITY.

The southern sneer at the mock morality of New England, has been repeated again by Senator Brown of Georgia. But it fails to hit the mark for it rests upon a popular falsehood for its foundation. Slavery died at the north not because it was unprofitable, but because public opinion was hostile to it. It died in Massachusetts, as Mr. Beecher showed in his sermon on Wendell Phillips, by a simple decision, when one case was brought into the courts, and the courts declared that it was inconsistent with the declaration of independence and the constitution, and the man went free. Slavery shriveled and perished of itself, because it was wrong and the popular conscience condemned and forbade it. In New York, Mr. Beecher goes on to show, a bill was passed early for the gradual emancipation of the slaves, a humane and careful bill, which was in operation for ten years, and then immediate freedom for all remaining bondmen was declared. Similar measures were adopted in other northern states where slavery existed, and in no instance can it be truthfully said that the sale of the slaves preceded the act of emancipation. On the contrary, in New York it was expressly provided that any master removing a slave from the state should be subjected to criminal punishment.

New England was superior in moral sentiment to the south from its earliest settlement, and it maintained that superiority in the emigration which has spread over the northern states. Had it not been for this superior moral feeling on the subject, slavery would have existed at the north as long as at the south. The negro to-day is not only the agricultural laborer in cotton, sugar and tobacco at the south, but he is the coal and iron miner, the stevedore, the roustabout on the steamboats, the section man on the railroads—in short, he stands not only for nearly all the unskilled rough labor of the south, but also for a considerable portion of its skilled labor. The unskilled labor of the north; the work of canal and railroad construction from Maine to Oregon; the marble, granite, coal and iron mining of the north could have been wrought by slaves at the north at as good a profit as at the south. Slavery died at the north not because it was unprofitable, but because it was seen to be morally and politically wrong. The same superior popular moral sense which made the north early in its history abandon the cruel criminal chain gang, that still is a blotch on the cheek of the south, made the north drop slavery.

The republican party by its platform demands "of congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non compliance with acts of incorporation in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the condition of such grant." The phrase "an attempt in good faith" furnishes perhaps a loophole for escape for members of the senate who refuse to concur in the bills passed by the house. But it may be fairly assumed that the republican party intends by this plank in good faith to recover some small part of the public domain which has been lavishly placed at the disposal of railroad speculators. The question might be raised whether the platform is binding upon the senators who were members of the convention. Senator Dolph and Senator Hoar were there, and presumably gave their assent to the platform. Senator Sabin called the convention to order. Senator Mahone sat in the Virginia delegation. Senator Cullom nominated Logan. Senators Harrison, Plumb and Sewell were delegates. It will be interesting to see how they regard the platform when the forfeiture bills come before them.

While fifteen democratic senators voted against the Utah bill, the true democrats of that territory are opposing the Mormons as much as the republicans are. They recently met in convention and issued an address to their fellow democrats through the country, protesting against placing the name of the Mormon delegate, with the brand of Cain, on the national committee. The Mormons profess an attachment to the democratic party, but it is a mere pretence. They are no more democrats than republicans. Everything to them is good or bad, only as it helps them to perpetuate their ill-gotten power and pleasures.

A striking instance of the worthlessness of expert testimony was exposed in an incident a short time ago in a New York court. A physician, an expert witness called by the plaintiff, testified that the plaintiff was "suffering from the remote effects of injury to the vaso motor system of nerves, and would, eventually, end in the lunatic asylum." He was subjected to a rigorous cross-examination by the defendant's counsel; among the other questions asked him was, "Are you familiar with 'Gross on Recent and Remote Effects of Head Injuries?' 'Zehmeyer on the Subsequent Effects of Nervous Shock?'" as well as several other learned works. He answered "yes," and added that he had them all in his own library, whereupon the counsel proved to the court that there were no such works; that the titles he had given were pure inventions of his own, and had been given solely for the purpose of exposing the expert witness. The judge in his charge to the jury, says the Daily Register, said that both bench and bar were fast approaching the belief that expert testimony of all kinds is valueless, "because the so-called experts are not witnesses, but advocates."

Bradstreet's Journal utters a strong and timely protest against the growing tendency of great corporations, particularly railway companies, to conceal or misrepresent their true financial status. The protest should be cordially approved and reechoed. Such concealment and misrepresentation are the basis of much financial disaster to-day. The reputed standing of great corporations is the most influential factor in general business credit and transaction. It is as much dishonesty for the whole corporation to present a false balance sheet to the public as for one defaulting corporation clerk to present a false balance sheet to his employers. Indeed, construed in its relations to business stability and the public faith, the former crime is the greater one. Corporations exist by public grant and tolerance, and are therefore especially accountable to the public for honesty. There would almost seem to be warrant for legislation requiring the annual publication of independently audited and certified accounts of corporations, at least, of those having a cash capital above a certain sum.

Lord Brougham, on being asked who was the best parliamentary orator in England, replied that Lord Stanley was the second. This appears to be the estimate that Mr. Dana puts upon all the democratic candidates for the presidency, whose merits and defects he kindly points out, and the natural inference is of course very much the same. Mr. Dana is in fact the only one who has not been proved by the Sun's showing to be a slow-going animal in a presidential race. Even the economical Holman, who at one time bore high promise of winning, was killed by a wood-cut in its own columns. Since then all the prominent names in the party have been passed in review and successively ruled out. "There is only one honest man left" said Falstaff in a similar dilemma.

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND CENSURED.

No Longer an Exponent of Reform—Friends of Good City Government in both Parties Keenly Disappointed.

N. Y. Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

Governor Cleveland, by withholding his signature from important municipal reform bills which had passed both houses of the legislature, has caused great dissatisfaction among the friends of good government in this city. Disappointment and regret are expressed by members of both parties. Democrats who have been active in efforts to purify the city government criticise the governor's action severely and say that he can no longer be considered a representative of the reform element. The feeling in regard to the defeat of the tenure of office act is especially strong. Tribune reporters yesterday obtained a number of interviews with members of the committee of fifty-three and of the council of reform, and with others who had sought to remove the abuses in the administration of municipal affairs.

Though a large number of the members of the Union League club are out of town there are many whom business or choice causes to remain in the city. Among those who were in the club last evening a strong feeling of dissatisfaction with Governor Cleveland's action was prevalent. They regarded his conduct in reference to the tenure of office and the park commission bills as an outrage on the community. "He has done himself irreparable injury," said one member of long standing, "and I am convinced that if there ever existed in the minds of any of the older and more responsible members a disposition to consider him favorably as a presidential candidate his present action has forever dissipated it. There seems to be little doubt that strong influences were brought to bear upon him to veto the tenure of office bill for political reasons, and one man in this city worked hard to bring it about. It shows that Cleveland is a weaker man than has been supposed."

This opinion was reiterated by other members in a more or less outspoken manner, and every one seemed to view the matter in its relation to the approaching democratic convention. It was said, too, that in the park commission bill an excellent measure had been put aside simply because it seemed to be coupled with the tenure of office bill.

Said Salem H. Wales on this subject: "I am much disappointed at the governor's action. Cleveland has weakened himself in the estimation of many members of this club who were favorably inclined to him. Concurrently with this feeling there is a strong Blaine sentiment growing every day here. I have this evening talked with many prominent members, and they all either declare their preference for Blaine or else refuse to speak, which is a good enough sign. Certainly I do not believe that any prominent member of this club will vote for any democrat that is likely to be nominated. The canvass, of course, has hardly begun, but when it does begin the feeling of the club will be closely watched, for it is a potent instrument for good. When the time comes I believe it will be strongly for Blaine. Arthur, of course, was the choice of the club. He was a member—a popular member—and his fellow members knew his record, and were satisfied with his administration. Blaine was not so well known. When he is there will be no opposition to him from the club as a club, I am convinced."

CAMPAIGN DRIFT.

It is said that ex-Senator Conkling and ex-Senator Platt are no longer on speaking terms.

An exchange thinks that a plank in favor of quart berry boxes that will hold two "pints" each would catch the housekeeper vote.

In reply to a report that he had said of Puck, "We have no animosity toward Blaine," Mr. Keppler writes: "The course of Puck has been shaped only by a sense of public duty, and, while we have no personal malice toward Mr. Blaine, we feel ourselves bound to oppose his candidacy."

Mr. Moen of Washburn & Moen, of Worcester, Mass., the opulent proprietors of the barbed wire fence monopoly stands ready to make up any deficiency of funds that may be occasioned by the bolting of Boston men. Of course such a message gives occasion for ill-natured remarks about the readiness of monopolists to see candidate Blaine through, but money is money in politics.

"In my opinion," says Colonel Snowden of Philadelphia, superintendent of the United States mint, "Blaine will be elected by the young men of the country—in part by that class of young men to whom party and party prejudices are unknown, and who admire and recognize in Blaine that enthusiasm, vigor, aggressiveness and manly American spirit which young men like in a national leader."

The Chicago Inter Ocean says, "Because Blaine was a sensational congressman and even a sensational secretary of state, it does not necessarily follow that he will make a sensational or imprudently aggressive president. What a man does to win a woman's heart and what he does when he is married and settled down to business are very different things. Blaine courting the American people and Blaine administering the American government would be the same Blaine, but altogether less frisky."

"The Independents are not," says the Chicago Times (ind.) "Pharisees and hypocrites, as the organs of the party idolatry assert. They are infidels, heretics that have cast off the shackles of that idolatry and asserted political independence of the individual. Their number has grown to a very respectable figure, and is still growing. They were enough to submerge an objectionable candidate for governor of New York under an avalanche in 1882; but whether they will be enough to save the nation from a far more objectionable aspirant to the presidency in 1884 the future can only answer."

"The logical and inevitable result of the organized effort to boycott public journals like Harper's Weekly and the Times, as the fool Blaine men have attempted," says the Philadelphia Times, "will be to make tens of thousands buy and read them who never bought or read them before. Besides, half the men who thoughtlessly sign the boycotting pledge will buy and study the cartoons in Harper's Weekly and in Puck with a degree of interest they never before felt in them, and intelligent republicans of every section will be specially interested to know what reasons such lifelong and unselfish republicans as George William Curtis and George Jones have for deserting the republican presidential candidate."

The proprietor of the New York Times is not an Englishman. He was born in Vermont. The Times' writers, without any exception whatever, are Americans. The Times is not, and never has been, a free-trade paper. It believes, with a great many ardent protectionists, that our tariff laws stand in need of revision. But in advocating revenue reform it has never advocated free trade for this country. The tariff is one thing, the presidency is quite another. The Times supported Senator Edmunds for the Chicago nomination, and he is a protectionist. Just now the voters have a question to settle which is of very much greater importance than the tariff question. It is a question that concerns the honor of the nation and its safety. The supreme and wholesome issue this year is whether or not the next president of the United States shall be a man honest himself and in favor of honest government.—N. Y. Times.

The Italian Army.

The Italian army has for some years been known as a legion of Benedicts. For many years it was a royal rule that no officer holding his majesty's commission should marry unless he possessed a certain amount of private income. Italy is not a rich nation, and the subalterns of its army are not wealthy. The consequence is that married officers have been the exception, not the rule, in Italy. The grievance—for in this light the rule has been regarded by its victims—was recently brought under the notice of his majesty, and the king has now relaxed the regulation, fixing the marriage income of his officers at a point which will enable the gallant gentlemen to enter the bonds of matrimony in the broad light of day, as becomes the action of the soldier, instead of marrying in secret and repenting at leisure.

An Unlucky Family.

New York Letter to Cincinnati Sun.

The Greeley family has been peculiarly unfortunate. Greeley's presidential canvass was a sad blunder, costing him his life and almost wrecking the Tribune. His wife's death occurred the same year, and the shattered presidential candidate was summoned from political exertion to attend her funeral, which only preceded his own by a few weeks. The same ill luck has followed his children. The eldest is said to have married in a very uncongenial manner, but was in a few years removed from earthly troubles by the hand of death, and Gabrielle, who is the only survivor of the Greeley family, has recently been severely injured by the upsetting of her carriage. What a curious series of mishaps and casualties!

THE STAGE-DRIVER'S STORY.

How General Scott's Life was Saved and how His Driver Twice Escaped Death.

The traveler of the present day, as he is hurried along by the lightning express, in its buffet cars and palace sleepers, seldom reverts in thought to the time when the stage coach and packet were the only means of communication between distant points. It is rare that one of the real old-time stage drivers is met with now-a-days, and when the writer recently ran across Fayette Haskell, of Lockport, N. Y. he felt like a bibliographer over the discovery of some rare volume of "forgotten lore." Mr. Haskell, although one of the pioneers in stage driving (he formerly ran from Lewiston to Niagara Falls and Buffalo), is hale and hearty and bids fair to live for many years. The strange stories of his early adventures would fill a volume. At one time when going down a mountain near Lewiston with no less a personage than General Scott as a passenger, the brakes gave way and the coach came on the heels of the wheel horses. The only remedy was to whip the leaders to a gallop. Gaining additional momentum with each revolution of the wheels the coach swayed and pitched down the mountain side and into the streets of Lewiston. Straight ahead at the foot of the steep hill flowed the Niagara river, towards which the four horses dashed, apparently to certain death. Yet the firm hand never relaxed its hold nor the clear brain its conception of what must be done in the emergency. On dashed the horses until the narrow ditch was reached on the river bank, when by a masterly exhibition of nerve and daring, the coach was turned in almost its own length and the horses brought to a standstill before the pale passenger could realize what had occurred. A purse was raised by General Scott and presented to Mr. Haskell with high compliments for his skill and bravery.

Notwithstanding all his strength and his robust constitution, the strain of continuous work and exposure proved too much for Mr. Haskell's constitution. The constant jolting of the coach and the necessarily cramped position in which he was obliged to sit, contributed to this end, and at times he was obliged to abandon driving altogether.

Speaking of this period he said:

"I found it almost impossible to keep at it right, my appetite left me entirely, and I had a tired feeling which I never knew before and could not account for."

"Did you give up driving entirely?"

"No. I tried to keep up but it was only with the greatest effort. This state of things continued for nearly twenty years, until last October when I went all to pieces."

"In what way?"

"Oh, I doubled all up; could not walk without a cane and was incapable of any effort or exertion. I had a constant desire to urinate both day and night, and although I felt like passing it every ten minutes only a few drops could escape and they thick with sediment. Finally it ceased to flow entirely, and I thought death was very near."

"What did you do then?"

"What I should have done long before; listen to my wife. Under her advice I began a new treatment."

"And with what result?"

"Wonderful. It unstopped the closed passages and what was still more wonderful, regulated the flow. The sediment vanished, my appetite returned and I am now well and good for twenty more years, wholly through the aid of Warner's Safe Cure, that has done wonders for me, as well as for so many others."

Mr. Haskell's experience is repeated every day in the lives of thousands of American men and women. An unknown evil is undermining the existence of an innumerable number who do not realize the danger they are in until health has entirely departed and death perhaps stares them in the face. To neglect such important matters is like drifting in the current of Niagara above the Falls.

LUCKY BALDWIN.

His Fourth Wife Forty Years Younger than he is—The Reason for the Nickname of a Pacific Coast Capitalist—Beginning Life as a Hostler and now Worth Many Millions.

San Francisco (Cal.) Correspondence New York Sun.

The recent marriage of E. J. Baldwin, otherwise known as "Lucky" Baldwin, to a poor girl forty years younger than himself has caused something of a flutter in society, but Baldwin's marriages have ceased to be sensational. This is his fourth venture within the memory of many people now living, and nothing that he may do in the matrimonial line will surprise his old friends and acquaintances much.

Like all the millionaires of the gold coast Lucky Baldwin has a history. Twenty years ago he was a hostler in a livery stable here, with no more expectation of being rich than the average drudge employed in such a capacity. When mining speculation became the rage he dabbled a little in stocks with a month's wages, just as an east'rn laboring man might invest his savings in a lottery ticket, or stake them on the ace, with the desperate chance of winning something. Baldwin won about $800 at the first clip, and forthwith resigned his onerous and responsible duties as a stable cleaner and groom, and set up a small livery stable for himself. This seemed to be enough to satisfy his every dream of glory, but in the course of time he found business good, and with a little money in hand made another investment in stocks. Once more fortune smiled on him, and he drew out several thousand dollars. Then livery stable keeping lost its charms to him. He sold his stable and his business and frequented the stock board. Another successful deal or two gave him the sobriquet of Lucky, and it has stuck to him ever since.

His first big strike was in Crown Point and Belcher in 1870. Flushed with his triumphs and then commanding millions in money, he went into Ophir with Jim Keene, and both doubled their wealth. Baldwin was then one of the organizers of the stock board, and after awhile, catching the building fever, he put up the Baldwin hotel, which cost $3,000,000. When the mining speculation era vanished he found himself poorer than he had been for many a month, but still rich, and getting his money into shape he set out to enjoy life. He purchased a magnificent ranch at Los Angeles, and, retaining possession of the Baldwin, he put his remaining cash into safe investments. His fortune is variously estimated today at from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, but whatever it is, he lives as expensively as any man on the coast, and has all and more than he knows how to spend.

Of his three former wives only one is dead. His first wife was a German, and his daughter by her married Budd Doble, the horseman, but did not live with him long. One of his former wives, on whom at the separation he settled $1,000,000, is living here with a married daughter. The bride of to-day is Miss Lillie O. Bennett, who is 20 years of age, a recent graduate from a seminary, and quite attractive as regards physical charms. Lucky is 60 if he is a day, and some say he is more than that, though all admit that he is looking unusually young and frisky just now. Miss Bennett's parents lived in Sacramento until about a year ago, her father being an architect. When his health failed last summer he was advised to move to the southern part of the state, and he chose Los Angeles as a place of residence. It was there that the young girl met Baldwin, who has been in the habit of spending much of his time on his magnificent ranch in that vicinity. The fondness of the strangely assorted couple has for some time been a subject of gossip, and society long ago made up its mind that there was to be a wedding. The ceremony was performed at the humble home of the bride's parents without ostentation, and at its conclusion the bridal party started for the east, intending to be absent about two months. On their return they will give a series of entertainments at Mr. Baldwin's home in this city.

A year ago last January Baldwin's luck was emphasized in a strange manner. He had for some time, it is alleged, been living on terms of intimacy with a young woman named Verona Baldwin, who said she was his niece, but the two had had a quarrel and Baldwin had cast her off. Early one morning the occupants of the Baldwin were startled by a pistol shot in one of the upper corridors, and investigation revealed the fact that Baldwin had been shot at and wounded by the girl. Lucky was walking along the corridor in company with Mrs. Carroll, another niece, when they met Miss Baldwin, who, as soon as she passed, turned and fired. Mrs. Carroll fainted, and Lucky ran, pursued by the young woman, who made several attempts to fire again, but without effect. Baldwin finally dodged into the room of a gentleman friend, the girl following, and from this apartment they fled to others. The police had been notified, and a policeman arrived just in time to disarm Miss Baldwin, for she had got her pistol in working order again, and in a moment more would have been able to do execution with it. Two surgeons were soon at Baldwin's bedside, and it was discovered that he had escaped with a wound in the arm, which was not of much consequence.

In the city prison Miss Baldwin, who was laboring under intense excitement, told her story in a pitiful way. She said that Baldwin had betrayed her, and, being desirous of ridding himself of her, procured her a position at San Anita as a teacher. The story of her relations with him followed her, however, and she was compelled to give up the school. Being without money or friends she returned to this city and implored him to assist her, but without success. After making several calls on him and being rebuffed she determined to kill him. People who knew the girl spoke of her as highly educated and of good character previous to her acquaintance with Baldwin. It was known that she had made several efforts to seek work in the city before she made the attempt on his life. Baldwin asserted that she had been persecuting him for years, and that her murderous assault on him was because of his refusal to give her money. At her trial it was found that she was insane, and she escaped punishment.

TAGLIONI AND CERITO.

Recollections of two Ballet Queens in the Earlier Half of This Century.

London Dramatic Times.

Then the ballet was superb. The great pas de quatre, a conception of Lumley's, was a feature. The combination of the four leading danseuses, Taglioni, also just passed away, Carlotta Grisi, Cerito and Lucille Grahn—into one gigantic pas created a degree of enthusiasm which those who do not think a terpsichorean contest the very highest collision that can occur in the gradual developments of humanity will be little able to understand. Such a combination of talent was never before and has never since been attained. Opinion was divided between Cerito and Taglioni as to which should bear the palm—the representative of the new or the old school. Cerito had the charm of youth. The genial sense of delight that beamed like sunshine in the looks of the fair Neapolitan and animated her every movement flung a glowing warmth over the scene. Her steps were rapid and brilliant, and the whirling bounds, which secured her the title of "Cherry Bounce," with which she traversed the stage were bewildering. The exquisite grace and ease with which the most astonishing difficulties were achieved, as if in very sport, consummate skill assuming an air of girlish playfulness and enjoyment, were the triumph of art.

Taglioni, on the other hand, relied on those graces of style which she only has ever exhibited in perfection, and which elevated dancing to the rank of an intellectual art. Till Taglioni appeared the feats of danseuses were regarded merely as they very much are now, when our burlesque danseuses look like so many turnstiles in a fit, as displays of personal beauty and physical power, combined occasionally with animal spirits and elegance of attitude and movement, but she invested them with the higher attributes of mental purpose and refined sensibility. With Taglioni it was the mind that danced. Her steps and poses—all her movements, in fact—appeared to be portions of one complete conception, and partook of that ideal quality which belongs to the emanations of fancy, whatever may be the medium of their development. We have seen many danseuses whose performances have surprised, dazzled, and delighted. In flexibility of limb, vigor, and rapidity of action, others may have surpassed her, but the charm of her chaste and delicate style, and the pure atmosphere of ideal beauty that pervaded her dancing have not been attained by any successor, at least not in an equal degree.

But all this splendor of song and dance was suddenly broken, and one of these squabbles which disturb incessantly operatic, beyond all other life, grew at length into a great schism, like that here, which threw the votaries of harmony into the direst discord. It was alleged that the season had been disfigured by riots which had lowered the character of the house. The night when Cerito, the sensation of the hour, failed to appear from illness and Catarina was substituted for Ondine, a storm of hisses assailed the performance, and though St. Leon, Cerito's husband, gave his assurance that she was unable to appear, the pirouettes of Lucille Grahn and Perrot were unheeded, and it swept the curtain down. The great riot, however, great from the position in the fashionable world of its creators, was what historically known as the "Tamburini row."

The concentrated power and curative virtues of Ayer's Sarsaparilla render it the most reliable and economical medicine that can be used. It contains no dangerous or harmful ingredients, and may be safely administered to patients of all ages. When you are sick the best medicine that can be obtained is none too good, and is the cheapest, whatever its cost.

LOVELY CHANTILLY.

The Famous Chateau of the Renowned Prince of Conde—Its Stables and Race Courses.

Paris Correspondence S. F. Post.

Chantilly is at once the Chatsworth, the Alton Towers and the Chiswick of France. It was the cradle and the tomb of the Montmorencys and the Condes. The village is some 27 miles from Paris, on the line between the capital and Calais. The population of the village is about 4000, and its chief industries are the now fashionable Chantilly lace, with a political significance, and hosiery. Latterly so many breeding studs have sprung up in the vicinity as to impart to it a Newmarket character. But it is with the castle, forest and race course that we have to do. Originally the manor belonged to Pierre d'Orgemont, chancellor of France, then to the Montmorencys. Anne of Austria granted the use of it to the Prince de Conde, and Louis XIV confirmed it possession to him. It continued in the Conde family until the death by suicide of the last of that race in 1830, Henri de Bourbon, when it passed by legacy to its present owner, the duc d'Aumale, youngest son of Louis Philippe. On his death it is no secret, it will pass to the duc d'Orleans, son of the compte de Paris, and now perpetual royal candidate for the throne of France.

THE CASTLE OF CHANTILLY

Is ranked as one of the wonders of France, and its stables the eighth wonder of the world. When Conde obtained possession of it he had only a rent roll of some 30,000 francs a year, but that did not prevent him from adding to the feudal chateau and laying out the grounds and forest with the genius of Le Notre, who did the same for Versailles. Though very poor since Spain failed to pay him his income, the prince none the less entertained there Louis XIV on his way to Flanders. The bill for the fete was 200,000 crowns. It was the fact of the fish not arriving in time—though it ultimately did—that caused the famous cook Vatel to commit suicide, considering his reputation involved. Having completed the chateau, Conde offered a prize of 1000 crowns for a poetic motto to place above the entrance gate. The best sent in consisted of an allusion to the great conquests and virtues of Conde, but that 1000 crowns represented not more than the rate of one sous per victory. Chantilly had for hosts the Emperor Charles V, Charles IX and Henri IV. In 1623 de Montmorency there sheltered Vian, the poet, who was condemned to be burned for

WRITING OBSCENE VERSES.

The duke's lady was fond of fishing, and the poet, in a witty stanza, expressed his pain and envy at not being a fish, so as to have the honor of dying on the duchess' hook. "We are," said the court preacher before Louis XIV, "all mortal—or nearly mortal," he added, turning to the king, who had a horror of death. "These two gases which are going to have the honor to finish before your majesty," once observed a chemical professor, when Napoleon I was among his auditors. Before the revolution the emperor Joseph of Austria and the king of Sweden were guests at Chantilly. During the revolution the castle and grounds suffered much. Napoleon I gave them as a marriage dowry to the Queen Hortense. So dilapidated was the castle in 1815 that the Emperor Alexander, in visiting the galleries, had to have an umbrella held over him. With the return of the Bourbons Conde's son, Henri de Bourbon, reacquired back the property. In 1852 Napoleon III confiscated that, as well as other estates of the Orleanist princes. It was bought in by Coutts & Co., the bankers, and held in trust for the Duc d'Aumale. For a time Earl Cowley, the English ambassador, resided there. But it was Henri de Bourbon, minister of Louis XV, who made Chantilly.

WHAT IT IS TO-DAY.

He pulled down and re-erected, or constructed, the stables, the English call the Isle of Love, the theater, museums; he did not touch the two celebrated fountains which Bassuet immortalized as playing day and night. He had executed the splendid mural paintings by Watteau. He walked about the grounds followed by an army of clerks with ink bottle and writing paper to note his answers to his patches. But what was of more importance to note his projects for embellishment. It was this prince who planned the magnificent lawn of 125 acres which forms the present racecourse, and it was out of the quarries underneath that was taken the stone to erect the superb stables and wings, capable of accommodating 250 horses; drawing-room style—a something to be seen—has been observed with a previous the prince must have believed in the doctrine of metempsychosis. The forest of Chantilly covers about 10,000 acres.

THE JANE DUCHE

Was organized by the Duc d'Orleans, and the French Oakes and Derby are run there. During the first real outing day it attracts a large concourse of people, but the rendezvous is always more patrician than plebeian. The Chateau d'Eu in Normandy is the headquarters of the Orleanist family, but Chantilly is the head center of Orleanism. Only sure friends are admitted to the castle stand, where the Duchesse de Chartres receives for her uncle. There is a private buffet also, but to which only the elect are admitted. The plebs despise all this, they make up for a run down to Chantilly something between a Cook's excursionist and an emigrant for South America; only the family and relatives do not come to see the pilgrim fathers start. The voyage is all straps and buckles, a multum in parvo of field glasses, flasks, wraps, sticks and handbags. On arriving, the walk through the forest to the race course is matchless. Some take an antediluvian cab, and drawn by a horse which for positively that day only indulges in the souvenir of a gallop throughout the year. But then all is bizarre and gay, joyful as spring, and merry as youth. The grand ambition of the mass is to get back and, taking a cab at the railway terminus, drive down the Rue Lafayette like a fire brigade; cooks, waiters and badauds grinning at the return.

THE DUC DE BOURBON

Was the last of the illustrious and unfortunate race of the Conde. He committed suicide in August 1830, at Chantilly, by hanging himself with a pocket handkerchief from a window bolt. His mistress, an English lady, Sophie Daws, to whom he left so much wealth, was accused of the death, but it was never proven. Indeed the old duke was never the same since Napoleon I murdered his only son, the duke d'Enghein, by shooting him in the moat at Vincennes. In his earlier days the duke had fought a duel with the Comte d'Artois, the brother of Louis XVIII, and later Charles X, for insulting his reputed wife at a masked ball. The duel came off in the Bois de Boulogne, in presence of a crowd of citizens. When the Comte d'Artois' son, the Duc de Berri, was assassinated, the duc, though an old man, forgot all his resentment and insisted on consoling the comte, as he knew the first what it was to have an only son murdered. Next he called on the king at the Tuileries. On being shown into the study where Louis XVIII was at work, the poor duke staggered and fainted. He remembered that it was precisely in that room Napoleon I had signed his abominable order to assassinate his son.

JENNY LIND, FORTY YEARS AGO.

London Letter to Freund's Weekly.

Her voice was a pure soprano of the fullest compass belonging to voices of this class and of such evenness that the nicest ear could discover no difference of quality from the bottom to the summit of the scale. She executed every description of passage, whether consisting of notes long drawn out or of the most rapid flights and fioriture, with equal agility and perfection. Her lowest notes came out as clear and ringing as the highest, and her highest were as soft and sweet as her lowest mellow round loveliness distinguishing every sound she uttered. Much of the effect of Jenny Lind's unrivaled voice always seems to us derived from the physical beauty of its sounds, but still more from the exquisite taste and skill with which it was used and the intelligence and sensibility of which it was the organ. Her execution was that of a complete musician. Every passage was as highly finished, as perfect in tone, time and articulation as if it proceeded from the violin of Paganini, with the additional charm which lies only in the human voice divine.

Equally conspicuous were Jenny Lind's qualities as an actress. As many who are happily still living who saw her here will remember, she was not regularly handsome, but no one left the theater that night of which we tell without feeling that she was beautiful. Nor was her beauty altogether that of the mind. She was of good height and well formed, her features were marked and expressive, particularly her eyes, which were dove like in their sweetness. Her movements were full of grace, and she had an air of ingenuous and engaging modesty and goodness which warmed the heart to look upon. Her elocution was charming, notwithstanding the disadvantage of a foreign language, and her declamation expressed the most delicate shades of feeling. The soft and gentle seemed the more congenial moods of her mind, but she gave the strongest expression of energy and passion to the terrors of the scene, for instance, in which Alice clings to the cross for refuge from the infernal tempter, and in the crowning efforts to rescue Robert from the power of the fiend. At the conclusion, when the fearful struggle is terminated by the stroke of midnight, her wild exulting cry ringing through the theater drew from the audience a sudden burst of sympathetic rapture. The enthusiasm was terrific. D'Orsay and D'Israeli, who were in Lady Blessington's box, men not easily moved, arose, waved their handkerchiefs and cheered lustily.

On all the performances we have ever seen, no opera stage she made the truest use of music as a language of passion and feeling. She realized the dramatic function of music so well described by Beaumarchais as being to opera what verse is to tragedy. Even when she was singing most divinely, and filling the ear with all the pleasure that musical sound can bestow, the mind was unconscious of the pleasure, which was the most exquisite enjoyment of it. We thought not of the sound, but what they expressed, as when in the days of old a Siddons dissolved a whole theater to tears by the thrilling melody in which Belvidera, with tones never to be forgotten by those who heard them, bade her husband "Remember twelve."

CATTLE FIELDS OF THE FUTURE.

With the influx of population and settling of our farming lands the question naturally arises where are we to get our cattle from in the future, as the cattle ranches of the western states have reached their maximum limit of extent, and the fact that the price of land is rapidly advancing while all the arable land pays large profits on agricultural pursuits than stock raising, tends to make our landed capitalists look for some other field to invest their money in. The Aleutian islands off the west coast of Alaska are undoubtedly the best situated and have more natural resources and advantages than any other body of land on this western coast. The largest of these islands, Onalaska, is about forty miles long by from five to ten miles wide. The area of the whole group is in the neighborhood of 8000 square miles, 3000 of which is fine valley land bearing rich nutritious grasses, while on the hill sides a very fine quality of grass grows profusely, which would make 1000 miles admirably suited for cattle ranches. The valleys at their heads run into the hills, around which and close to them are several pockets which would form the most natural and easy of access shelter in case of a storm that could possibly be conceived. Several small streams flow into the ocean which abound with trout, and are so situated that cattle would not have to go more than half a mile for water, while on our own cattle plains they sometimes have to go three to five miles. The lowest temperature recorded by the U. S. signal station was six degrees above zero, and the highest but ten more, and exceeded that of western Oregon, while gnats and mosquitoes so prevalent in other countries are unknown here. The cowboys and wranglers of the plains could here be dispensed with by the fact that the ocean makes a lot of fence, while the branding of cattle would be useless on account of a company occupying one or more of the group, thereby saving the expense of hire, and one dollar more added to the value of the hides would make a vast difference in the net profits of a company operating in the Aleutian island and one in the western states. Prairie fires are unknown in this region by virtue of its keeping so green up to the first frost in December, which would reduce all risk and add another line in its favor. The Japanese black stream, corresponding to the gulf stream in the Atlantic, flows almost around these islands, making the temperature better than that of Great Britain. Lieutenant F. Schwatka, in a letter addressed to a gentleman in this city dated May 22 1884, says: "While on my military reconnoissance for the United States last year I visited these islands, and an accident to the ship gave me a longer delay than I anticipated, which I improved by making an examination of them. Without going into any scientific or even common classification of the grasses I would say that it was as luxuriant and good quality as any I have ever seen in my life, and twelve years of that life has been spent in close contact with the cattle interests of Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Montana and other great stock raising districts. I would again repeat that the cattle I saw on Oonalaska island were in far better condition than the average of the many thousand carloads I have seen shipped eastward from the plains. It was their continuously excellent condition that first called my attention to the grasses, and afterwards exploring the islands with the view of ascertaining whether suitable for cattle companies on a large scale. While the people told me that they cut hay for their cattle in the winter, I ascertained the amount was insignificant, and grew out of the fact that these cattle, the only ones on the Aleutian islands, were treated like pets more than needed. I believe if a company would have two vessels to call and be put in Victoria a lively business at a small per head, and San Francisco would deliver them if Portland and San Francisco respectively. As you well know, these markets are the most distant now and supplied with cattle from the ranges of eastern Washington, Idaho and Montana by rail, at four or quadruple that amount.

I interested a few of the United States army who visited the island with me in their cattle but was far from I saw the grasses and I tell you just as my eyes and as though it was in the middle of September the frosts has not touched it. A better grazing prospect I have never seen. Dr. Hall's report tallies: The cattle were remarkably fat and the beef very delicate and tender, hardly surpassed by any well fed stock. All of which goes to show that it will be the future cattle country of the Pacific coast."

A Woman's Involuntary Confession.

London Truth.

We witnessed a revelation the other day, an involuntary confession of a curious kind. I knew that women wore various sorts of deceptions and aid-chignons, but I never had heard of a false back to the head. When Maud was buying her bonnet there was a lady trying on ever so many. At last the wire of one of them caught in her hair and pulled off all the back part of her coiffure, which we had been admiring because it waved so prettily and fell in such dear little curls on her neck and round the backs of her ears. It wasn't as though she wore a false plait or a chignon. This was as we afterward heard called a sunflower, and exactly resembled the natural hair, with drawn up to the top of the head. What next, my dear?

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

MONDAY, June 23.

A fair trade is doing along the street to-day, and an active week is promised. Fresh showers yesterday and to-day are welcomed, and they extend the length of the valley. More or less rain has been had at points in the eastern section, crops being reported as doing better.

Mixed weather in the mountains has again affected the stage of water. At Riparia the Snake shows 4 inches in 48 hours. Points along the Columbia are about as noted Saturday morning.

Our New York stock report to-day shows a decline of from a half to five and one half points in all stocks other than Oregon Improvement, which alone holds its own. Transcontinental and O. R. & N. touch their lowest point to-day. That Wall street is very considerably shaken up is shown by the decline in bonds and the Fed securities. On the other side of the water finances are evidently in better condition. The Bank of England has lowered its interest rate ½ per cent.

PRODUCE RECEIPTS—Last 48 hours: 16 ctls wheat, 3 7 bbls flour, 84 ctls oats, 105 ctls bran, 2310 lb wool, 980 lb hides, 36 pkgs eggs, 8 bxs fruit, 15 pkgs butter. Also 482 ctls wheat, 50 bbls flour, 110 [illegible] wool, 144 sks flaxseed from the eastern section.

FREIGHTS—A dull and uninteresting market rules. At San Francisco two wooden ships have accepted 51 and 5 [illegible] for wheat. This rate is below that generally named by holders of tonnage. The visible supply of tonnage on and for this coast has increased 11,000 tons in the past seven days.

WHEAT—There is next to nothing doing, and a safe quotation is quite out of the question. Beerbohm notes large arrivals off coast and warmer weather in England, both tending to cause a soft market. Other markets show no phase of new interest.

OATS—A better inquiry is had and values are strengthened. The present request is surprising, and beyond previous calculation. Quotations are without change yet the market favors sellers, and to fill orders an advance on 48 cents has been made.

HOPS—On the spot there is nothing doing. For forward delivery the situation is strong and growers have a decided advantage. Buyers now on the coast are bidding up in anticipation of a short crop. A London circular says the prospect for 1884 picking is good. The usual report of fly, etc., comes from interested quarters, but the crop cannot be estimated for good or evil till August.

WOOL—The local market moves slowly, previous prices being continued. Receipts are only fair for the season. The eastern and California markets present nothing new. A private London circular says: "Although the present series have been largely attended and very little withdrawn for future sale the price has not advanced. The present series close on the 12th instant June, and the third series for 1884 commence on the 12th of August.

POTATOES—Old very scarce at 65 cents per bushel. New California weak under advices at $1 60@1 75.

ONIONS—Weak owing to advices from San Francisco, which quote lower. Selling here at $1 50@1 75, with declining tendency.

BUTTER—A good article is quoted at 25 cents, with good to medium at [illegible] cents.

CHICKENS—Not so much of a drag yet the supply is more than is conducive to good prices. We quote old $ [illegible] and young $3.

Marriage Superstitions.

From the Philadelphia Times.

Marriage superstitions hold a great sway in Philadelphia and the number of people who fear to violate them is large. June always sees a great increase in the number of weddings because May is not considered so lucky. There are certain times and dates, however, which are considered more fortunate than others for the marriage ceremony, owing, perhaps, to some old ideas of astrology, and if any one will notice it will be found that they are extensively observed. It must not be forgotten that this is leap year, and the days which superstition fixes upon as being the most fortunate are February 6, 7, 18; March 7, 6, 8; April 6, 11; May 5, 6, 7; June 7, 15; July 6, 19; August 10, 19; September 6, 7; October 6; November 16, 17; and December 15, 16, 17. Whether it has anything to do with it or not, the moon at these days is in the same sign of the zodiac.

SPRING
Is the season when the tainted or poisoned blood is most apt to show itself. Nature, at this juncture, needs something to assist it in throwing off the impurities which have collected by the sluggish circulation of the blood during the cold winter months. Swift's Specific is nature's great helper, as it is a purely vegetable alterative and tonic.

Rev. L. B. Payne, Macon, Ga., writes: "We have been using Swift's Specific at the orphans home as a remedy for blood complaints and as a general health tonic, and have had remarkable results from its use on the children and employes of the institution. It is such an excellent tonic and keeps the blood so pure that the system is less liable to disease. It has cured some of our children of scrofula."

W. H. Gilbert, druggist, Albany, Ga., writes: "We are selling large quantities of Swift's Specific for a spring alterative and general health tonic, and with the best results. It is now largely used as a preventive and cure for Malaria. There are many remarkable evidences of its merit in this section."

The Great Drug House of Chicago.
We do not hesitate to say that for a year past we have sold more of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) than all other Blood Purifiers combined, and with most astonishing results. One gentleman who used a half dozen bottles says it did him more good than treatment which cost him $1000. Another who has used it for a scrofulous affection reports a permanent cure from its use.
VAN SCHAACK, STEVENSON & CO.

One gentleman who had been confined to his bed six weeks with Mercurial Rheumatism has been cured entirely, and speaks in the highest praise of S. S. S.

WOLFE'S
Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps.
As a general beverage, necessary corrective of water rendered impure by vegetable decomposition or other causes, as limestone, sulphate of copper, etc., the AROMATIC SCHNAPPS is superior to every other alcoholic preparation. A public trial of over thirty years duration, in every section of our country, of UDOLPHO WOLFE'S SCHNAPPS, its unsolicited indorsement by the medical faculty, and a sale unequaled by any other alcoholic distillation, have insured for it the reputation for salubrity claimed for it. For sale by all druggists and grocers.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
EPPS'S COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold in tins only (½ lb and lb) by Grocers, labeled thus:

This BELT or Regenerator is made expressly for the cure of derangements of the generative organs. There is no mistake about this instrument, the continuous stream of ELECTRICITY permeating through the parts must restore them to healthy action. Do not confound this with Electric Belts advertised to cure all ills from head to toe. It is for the one specific purpose. For circulars giving full information, address Cheever Electric Belt Co., 103 Washington st., Chicago, Ill.
